Click to expand You had better check your sources again Both the PP and PPK went into the 900,000 range and then, in about 1940, started over with a letter (P or K) after the serial number. Many more 7.65 (32acp) pistols were made than the other 3 calibers combined Thus the 7.62. Also from the same author: Walther's production of the 25 caliber PP manufactured only in 1929 and 1930 was simply a test to see whether the gun would sell in this caliber. By wars end they were, I believe, again in the 400,000 range with the letter Sep 05, 2013 Walther P1 serial Numbers. They replaced the barrel after one year I got an expert opinion on the P1 from the Walther forums. Waves All Plugins Free Download

Hey everyone, My dad told me about my Grandfather's Walther that he brought back from WWII that he took off a German soldier. All I know is that the slide is longer than the modern day PPK and the caliber was not printed anywhere on the pistol itself. Hopefully one day I'll get to see and shoot it Quick question on older firearms. Is modern day ammo safe to use in them and for the PP/PPK series of pistols, do current magazines fit in them? Thanks again. 65 PP is not at all rare, or even uncommon The PPK is a bit more so, but still not rare. I thought the OP was speaking of 'Nazi Walther PPs', but even in the same source there are several different numbers: My source for the following is 'The Walther Handgun Story' by Gene Gangarosa: When Walther began its production, PP serial number started at 750000. The 25 proved to be unpopular and Walther hurriedly ceased production Rather than make a separate die to mark the slide on the. [grin] Respectfully, Sarge My source was posted, take it for what it is Do you have a source for your numbers or are you extrapolating(guessing) based on serial number ranges? I don't know how one can base production numbers of the PP based on serial numbers considering where the numbering started in 1929 at serial number 750000, restarted at 10000 in 1938 and that the numbering for the PP and PPK were intermingled up to 1938. In 1938 when they reached one million, they restarted numbering at 10000 P and reached 396000 P by the end of the war. 0041d406d9 Software To Extract Nrg Files
